

IOS Listers Corner 2010

Total Counties per Species List

(Top eight totals per county - 102 possible counties)

The growing interest in this list has led to a reporting change. In the past, we listed only the top six tallies, but, starting this year, we've expanded it to the top eight, allowing even more birders to have their achievements noted. The list 'quality' is nearing maturity as additional birders have submitted extensive updates or selected first-time species reports. Perhaps by this time next year we'll receive submissions from the last few remaining birders who likely have tallies that would make this list.

As this list has grown, birders have found a number of species in all 102 counties. This can give a general metric on species distribution and abundance throughout the state. Those species seen in all counties by five or more birders, such as the American Robin and Red-winged Blackbird, demonstrate their extensive presence and numbers in Illinois. It may be mildly surprising to see that House Sparrow and Northern Cardinal, seen in all counties by seven birders, are ahead of the robin and blackbird, but we can accept that these species are quite abundant. Can you name the two species seen in all 102 counties by more birders (eight) than any other species? European Starling probably wouldn't surprise anybody at being one of the top two most commonly found. However, does it surprise you that Mourning Dove is the other species seen in all counties by the most birders?

An interesting story evolved this past year when Thad Edmonds began a concentrated quest to attempt to find Barred Owls in every county in the state. He was extremely successful in his effort, adding 50 new counties in 2010! He only needs 18 more to accomplish his goal and it would make this owl the first of the less common species to be fully tallied on this list. There have been other similar, although more limited, quests along this theme. The great White-winged Crossbill/Common Redpoll chase in 2009 was a short-term, focused listing attempt limited to two species. There could be other birders who have or will decide to target specific species they enjoy, in an attempt to explore its abundance and distribution in the state. I know I (Eric) have five favorite species that I have targeted for years. One, the Red-breasted Nuthatch, has been enjoyable to seek out, testing various habitats at different timeframes throughout the state. Perhaps others might have a less common statewide species they desire to exclusively pursue. One species that is ripe for the picking is Bald Eagle, a species that nests in more counties than the current top listers have recorded for it!

One significant highlight to this year's list include Scott Simpson's new submission of seven counties for Greater Prairie-Chicken, along with his correction of nine for Ron Westermeier's tally. They achieved these totals during decades of research on this species, back when they could be found in many more counties than is possible today. It might take more than a century, if ever, for anybody to have a chance at exceeding those new top two tallies!

Other 2010 highlights include birders submitting for the first time to a top species list, or adding significant tallies to a few rarer species. These include Edmonds' Swainson's Hawk (4 counties), Fisher's Snowy Owl (9), Fisher's Smiths Longspur (increase of 5), Shelby's Barn Owl (7), Sigler's Black-necked Stilt (16), Sigler's Red Knot (9) and Walters' Willet (increase of 6). Also noteworthy is Baum's raptor family tally increase of over 135 total ticks in 2010. A late, but welcome, contribution was Steve Bailey's first-ever TCPS submission, which led to major changes in this list, as he is now tied, or at the top of the list, for 39 species. We look forward to further updates from one of the state's most active birders! "Multiple observers" means that 10+ birders have reported the same total.
